THE ILLINOIS STATE ADVISORY COUNCIL (ISAC) ON THE EDUCATION OF CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES — COMMITTED TO EDUCATIONAL EXCELLENCE FOR ALL ILLINOIS STUDENTS

The members of ISAC represent Illinois stakeholders in the education of children with disabilities and share a personal commitment to improving the educational experience for these students. The Council includes twenty-three persons appointed by the Governor and four ex-officio voting members. These council members are individuals with disabilities, parents of children receiving special education services, teachers, administrators and representatives of agencies that support students with disabilities.

It is estimated that one in five people in our society experiences a disability. In Illinois, our public schools served 2,075,275 students in the 2005/2006 school year. Of those students, 322,541 or nearly 16% received special education services.

School is a major part of life for everyone in our society. Our education prepares us for our personal and vocational future and provides the experience we need to successfully live, work, and play in our communities. Families choose their communities based on the quality of education available for their children.

The quality of special education services is no less significant to families. It is important that the services available to support our children with disabilities are consistent with best-practice and are research-based. Our children with disabilities must be valued members of their school communities, participating in activities and enjoying the same quality education and high expectations as their non-disabled peers.

Unemployment statistics for people with disabilities remain dismal – an undeniable indicator of the need for continued efforts to improve the educational opportunities for our children with disabilities.

Our goals at ISAC include supporting Illinois schools in their efforts to provide exceptional educational opportunities for students who require special education services.

When you meet Susy Woods, you automatically think of dynamic, unstoppable, never ending energy and passion, a million different and wonderful descriptors. Let me tell you a little about this woman and see if you don’t agree with me after reading this.

Susy, a wife, mother of two children and grandmother of two adorable girls, found herself in a third Individualized Education Plan (IEP) meeting for her son, Adam, ten years old at the time, disagreeing with the local school district staff who were adamant about busing Adam 110 miles (round trip) a day to attend a school that could manage his health issues. Susy’s objections were ignored, so she sent a letter to then First Lady, Barbara Bush, asking for assistance for her son to attend the local school in Carlinville, Illinois. Barbara Bush called Susy personally and the transportation issue was no longer.

This story doesn’t surprise anyone who knows Susy. After working with Barbara Bush, Susy says she learned two life lessons "things happen when you have a political voice behind you and that change only happens from the top down." Susy became involved with the Family Support Network and other organizations and provided witness testimony at committee hearings at the State capitol and before the State legislature concerning special education issues. Susy started with Phil Mills and Associates about six years ago and has been a lobbyist for disability and poverty issues ever since.

She only wants what is morally right for everyone. Susy's dedication to toddlers, children and adults with disabilities is truly a learned obsession and one that we are all so thankful she learned.

And now for a description of her never-ending energy. Susy is the executive chairperson for the Illinois State Advisory Council for Children With Disabilities (ISAC); she has been a member of this Council for four years. She is an adjunct professor at the University of Illinois at Springfield (UIS) and teaches in the Women Studies Program; is the Director of Disability Services at UIS, is a board member of ARC of Illinois, IMPACT (Center for Independent Living), UCP, Planned Parenthood, and the Illinois Assistive Technology Program (IATP).

Whew...........Susy also says that she can only do all of this because her children are grown and her husband can cook for himself. I forgot to tell you she has an incredible sense of humor too!
How do students with disabilities transition from a student with a disability to an adult with a disability?

Good question.......many young adults, parents, teachers, counselors, professionals in the health field, attended the third annual Illinois Transition Conference in Effingham on December 3rd and 4th, 2007, to find out just how to make a good, strong, successful transition plan.

While accessible transportation to get to and from work might not be an issue in Chicago, it certainly is in southern Illinois. Affordable and accessible housing for young adults with disabilities to live independently is available in most areas of Illinois but is a huge problem in Chicago. People on lists for Section H housing are waiting years or the lists are closed if you want to live in Cook County. How do you plan for post-secondary opportunities? Job training? Finding jobs?

This year's conference was a huge success with more than 600 people attending. Participants gained a better understanding of the transition process and were provided with resources to make successful transition planning happen.

Recent state and federal legislation has put transition planning high on the list of mandatory requirements for students with disabilities. Data collection for student outcomes is now part of the Illinois State Performance Plan, a requirement that the Illinois State Board of Education must complete for the federal Department of Education, Office of Special Education.

We thank the Illinois State Board of Education, the Illinois Department of Human Services, the Division of Specialized Services for Children and many other state agencies for their sponsorship of this valuable information gathering and sharing conference.

So, if you have constituents that have contacted you about transition planning and who feel scattered ......are blowing in the wind......and not sure where to turn to for good transition planning, suggest they attend the Fourth Annual Transition Conference on October 27th - 29th, 2008 at the Peoria Convention Center. No leaf will remain unturned as we again explore transition planning.
